

DAILY LIVES AND CORRUPTION:
PUBLIC OPINION IN EAST AFRICA

Transparency International is the global civil society organisation leading the fight against corruption. Through more than 90 chapters worldwide and an international secretariat in Berlin, we raise awareness of the damaging effects of corruption and work with partners in government, business and civil society to develop and implement effective measures to tackle it.

1. Introduction

Public views on corruption are of critical importance. They offer significant insight into how corruption affects lives around the world. Transparency International believes it is crucial to present the public's perspective on corruption – for it is they who suffer its direct and indirect consequences. At the same time, Transparency International encourages the public to personally play an active role in stopping corruption and improving governance.

Between 2010 and 2011, more than 8000 people were interviewed in eight East African countries – Burundi, Ethiopia, Kenya, Rwanda, South Sudan, Sudan, Tanzania and Uganda – on their views of corruption levels in their countries and the effectiveness of their governments' efforts to fight corruption. This report also examines the frequency of reports of bribery in different sectors and institutions, and the reasons respondents gave as to why they paid bribes during the last year. It also investigates public willingness to engage in the fight against corruption. The report focuses on bribery and corruption as experienced by the public in their everyday lives. It does not therefore assess some of the other forms of corruption, for example policy capture and embezzlement and political nepotism, which also may be prevalent in these countries.

This report collates the results of the survey conducted in these 8 countries in the East Africa region. Each country report is organised into the following sections:

Public perceptions of corruption

The survey asked people for their perceptions of corruption in their home country, specifically capturing views on whether people felt that overall corruption levels had increased or decreased over recent years. The survey also asked people to rate the extent of corruption in different institutions separately, identifying key institutions where corruption was perceived to be greatest and thus enabling the targeting anti-corruption efforts to these particular institutions.

Personal experiences of bribery

The survey asked people if they had come into contact with 1 of 9 identified services in their country. For each of these services they were then asked if they had paid a bribe. From this we can identify the services for which people were most likely to pay a bribe. The percentage of people paying a bribe for each service is given as a proportion of people who had accessed that service. People that did not come into contact with each service were excluded from the analysis. The results by service were then aggregated to identify whether an individual was a bribe payer. A bribe payer was considered someone who had paid for any one or more of the services listed in the last 12 months. These results can then be broken down by gender, income and age to understand better, providing us with information not only on where the bribes are paid, but also on who is paying them. The survey also probed for reasons why bribes were paid in the last 12 months.

Views on the fight against corruption

Equally as important as capturing public views and experiences of the extent of bribery and corruption, is gathering the views on the fight against corruption. People were asked for their views of the effectiveness of the current government in the fight against corruption. These results were then disaggregated by respondents that had or had not paid a bribe in order to understand how experiences of bribery affected perceptions of government effectiveness. People were also asked, from a list of 5 institutions, which institution were most trusted to fight corruption.

Getting involved

This section reports the results of questions which capture peoples willingness to get involved in the fight against corruption. The survey first asks respondents if they believe that ordinary people in their country can make a difference in the fight against corruption. Respondents were then asked if they would get involved by supporting a colleague or friend. Finally people were asked if they would be proactive in the fight against corruption, first if they could imagine themselves getting involved and second using a more specific example with a question that asked if they would report an incident of corruption.

2. Burundi

1,014 people were surveyed in Burundi between April 30th and May 6th 2011. The survey was conducted through face to face interviews by Infinite Insight through Gallup International. The data were weighted by age, gender and region to represent the national adult population of Burundi.

Appendix A: About the survey

The data in this report was gathered in two phases of the 2010-2011 survey wave. Kenya and Uganda were surveyed as part of Transparency International's 2010 Global Corruption Barometer. The fieldwork was carried out in these countries between 1 June and 30 July 2010. In 2011 the coverage of the Global Corruption Barometer survey was extended to an additional set of countries, which included Burundi, Ethiopia, Rwanda, Sudan, South Sudan and Tanzania. These countries were surveyed between April and May 2011. Both phases used the same questionnaire and the same research methodology. Details of the survey carried out in each country are presented in the table below.

The demographic variables captured in the questionnaire are: age, education, household income, employment and religion.

In each country the sample is probabilistic. It was designed to represent the national adult population in Burundi, Ethiopia, Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda, the urban adult population in Rwanda and Sudan and the population of Juba and its environs in South Sudan. The interviews were conducted via face-to-face interviews in all countries except Kenya, where the survey was conducted via telephone, using CATI. The data were weighted to generate representative data for each country. The final questionnaire, which was reviewed and approved by Transparency International, was marked with columns, codes, and with indications of single or multi-punching. Local survey agencies followed this layout when entering data and sent an ASCII data file to the Gallup International Association's Coordination Center following these specifications. The data was processed centrally by analysing different aspects such as whether all codes entered were valid and if filters were respected and bases consistent. If any inconsistency was found, this was pointed out to the local agency so they could evaluate the issue and send back the revised and amended data. Data for all countries was finally consolidated and weighted as specified above. All data analysis and validation was done using STATA software.

Details of the survey carried out in each country are presented in the table below.

	Local survey company	Number of interviews	Methodology	Coverage	Field dates
